followed by a letter is to be interpreted the same as if followed by the letter "a."

The size of the fascicles will not be uniform, although each will contain probably not less than twenty-five packets, and often many more. The number of species in a fascicle will also be variable. It is believed that the first fascicle, with seventeen species and thirty-one packets, fairly represents the average character of the fascicles to follow. While the number of species and packets in a fascicle will be variable, it is intended to have the value of the fascicles, as represented by the quality, rarity and desirability of the forms, as uniform as possible.

The nomenclature and synonymy of the distribution are such as will, it is hoped, enable ready identification with that of standard works, and at the same time be in the main in accord with present accepted authority. In some cases much study has been given to unravel the synonymy of a species, and in all cases care has been exercised; but the editors will feel amply satisfied, if they have correctly and clearly identified each form, believing that questions of revised nomenclature do not properly belong to an undertaking of this kind.

To meet the preferences of individuals and the requirements of herbaria and libraries, the series is issued in two forms: in loose packets, and in well bound octavo volumes.
